Since this scheme started I have noticed a drastic price increase on soft drink, cans in particular. It seems that this is an exercise in futility. Pay more for a product, then do something (take the containers to the collection point) to make the price roughly what it was pre scheme. It's just making recycling more complicated. For mine, I love recycling and I'm happy to do it but I'd rather not have the price built into to product and then have to earn it back.
